Since its inception in 2011, WFRN has provided many work-family scholars and practitioners (myself included) a vibrant intellectual home, spanning disciplines, countries, and continents. This past year, as the world (and our in-person conference) faced unprecedented challenges in the face of a global pandemic, WFRN continued to provide this connection, through the creative move of our conference to monthly virtual live sessions. Looking forward, I believe these activities can serve as a starting point for new ways to remain connected not only at our next in-person conference, but throughout the year, through virtual symposia, an expansion of our interest groups networks, and workshops on a wide-range of member-suggested topics. I am also committed to expanding our tent, ensuring that the organization that has been so welcoming to me provides that same sense of welcome to all those interested in being part of our community. Increasing the diversity of our membership and our leadership should be a continued priority for WFRN in the years ahead. We have had a wonderful first decade as an organization and I am excited to have the opportunity to play a part in the next.
