Since 2014, I’m member of the WFRN. At the WFRN, I have found inspiration for research that aims at ameliorating workers’ and their families’ lives by informing practitioners through profound empirical-based evidence.

In my own work, research and policy consulting go hand in hand. The ways of working and the spheres of life are changing drastically. One of my main goals is to encourage political actors and organizations to ensure that everybody profits from these changes.

As an executive board member at the WFRN, I will foster the debate on data and methods that are needed to capture ongoing changes of labor. I will support the exchange between researchers from different disciplines and countries and hopefully enlarge the WFRN. A crucial part of my work is the transfer of research findings to a broader audience. I will use this experience to promote the dialog between the WFRN and practitioners.
