CAREER OVERVIEW

Ellen Galinsky, President and Co-Founder of Families and Work Institute (FWI), helped establish the field of work and family, beginning when she was at Bank Street College of Education, where she was on the faculty for 25 years. Her more than 90 books and reports include the best-selling Mind in the Making: The Seven Essential Life Skills Every Child Needs, Ask The Children, the now classic The Six Stages of Parenthood and Workflex: The Essential Guide to Effective and Flexible Workplaces. At the Institute, Ms. Galinsky co-directed or directed the National Study of the Changing Workforce, the most comprehensive nationally representative study of the U.S. workforce. She also co-directed When Work Works, a project on workplace flexibility and effectiveness first funded by the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation that has launched the When Work Works Awards as well as conducted the National Study of Employers, a nationally representative study that has tracked trends in employment benefits, policies and practices since 1998. FWI's research was typically reported in the media more than three times a day between January 2010-2016, and Ellen Galinsky has been one of the most frequently quoted experts on work-life and early childhood issues.

In 2011, the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) and the Families and Work Institute (FWI) formed a ground-breaking, multi-year partnership that took When Work Works out to 5000 businesses around the country. In 2016, Families and Work Institute's transitioned some of its workforce-workplace research and action projects to SHRM but continued to publish its own workforce research and has increased its activities in 2022-23.

Between 2016 and 2022, Mind in the Making (MITM) was a program of the Bezos Family Foundation, where Ellen served as Chief Science Officer. In October of 2022, Mind in the Making returned to Families and Work Institute.

MITM is an unprecedented effort to share the science of children's learning with the general public, families and professionals who work with them. Based on Mind in the Making: The Seven Essential Life Skills Every Child Needs (HarperCollins, 2010) by Ellen Galinsky, its mission is to promote Life Skills that are based on and promote Executive Functions in adults and through them in children in order to keep the fire for learning burning brightly in all of us. Projects include: Mind in the Making Modules that are implemented in communities/ states across the country including the National Head Start Association with a new online version launching in January 2023; a DVD collection of 42 videos showing experiments in child development research for colleges and universities; Skill Building Opportunities — 98 downloadable tip sheets on frequently asked questions by families that show how to turn behavior problems into learning opportunities; Opportunity Mindset Tips-40 tips; Skill Building Book Tips that have been downloaded close to a million times, and Vroom, more than 1000 brain building tips created for the Bezos Family Foundation that are used by a million and a half families around the world. She also worked with Mt. Sinai Parenting Center to co-create Keystones of Development, an online curriculum that now is being used by 69% of pediatric residency teaching programs nationwide.

In partnership with the Civic Science Center at the University of Minnesota, current projects include a Workforce Index, created initially for use with the Head Start community as an award for all of the Head Start programs nationally and then we will take out to other settings. In addition, Ellen Galinsky will be working to create new training and tools on adolescent development for adolescents, their parents, and the professionals who work with them. She is also consulting with a number of governmental, educational, and health organizations on young people's mental health.

Ellen Galinsky's life's work revolves identifying important societal questions as they emerge, conducting research to seek answers, and turning the findings into action. She strives to be ahead of the curve, to address compelling issues, and to provide rigorous data that can affect our lives. This journey began in the 1960s and continues today.

In the late 1960s, while on the faculty of Bank Street College, she addressed issues in the transition to parenthood by researching and writing a book Beginnings, and helping to establish and contribute to the emerging family support movement.

In the 1970s, she researched and co-authored a book about exemplary child care, The New Extended Family: Day Care That Works, then used the lessons learned to help found the Family Center at Bank Street and then, in the decades that followed, to conduct a series of quantitative studies on the impact of interventions to improve the quality of child care and children's development.

In the 1980s, she studied how parents grow and change as adults and then wrote the now classic Six Stages of Parenthood. The findings from that initiative led to a series of studies on parent-professional relationships. These studies inspired her to work toward redefining parent engagement—away from a standard of professionals as experts and parents as the recipients of this professional expertise—toward building genuine partnerships where parents and professionals learn together.

Seeing how important work-life issues are, she helped to establish the field of work-life in the 1980s and co-founded Families and Work Institute (FWI) in 1989, becoming its president in 1996. For 30 years she directed the Work-Life Leadership Council for The Conference Board. Since the 1990s, Ms. Galinsky has directed or co-directed the most comprehensive ongoing studies of the U.S. workforce (National Study of the Changing Workforce) and workplace (National Study of Employers).

In 2000, Ellen Galinsky became concerned that far too many young people were dropping out of learning and she turned to investigate how to keep the fire for learning burning brightly in children's eyes. The resulting research journey led to her best-selling book, Mind in the Making: The Seven Essential Life Skills Every Child Needs. Its mission is to promote Life Skills that are based on and promote Executive Functions.

Her forthcoming book, The Breakthrough Years: Five Things Every Adolescent Wants Us to Know and Why We Should Listen, will be published by Flatiron Press in January, 2024.

Career highlight include writing more than 90 books and reports and over 360 articles for books, academic journals, magazines, the Web, serving as a child care expert in the TV series What Every Baby Knows with Dr. T. Berry Brazelton; serving as a parent expert in the Mister Rogers Talks to Parents TV series; being the elected President of the National Association for the Education of Young Children; being elected as a member of National Academy of Human Resources; receiving a number of awards including the Distinguished Achievement Award from Vassar College, 40 over 40 by Forbes Magazine, 7 Wonders of the WorkLife World by Working Mother; and speaking at five White House conferences on children and family issues. In 2017, Exchange magazine honored her as a Doyen in the early childhood field—a “special group of leaders held in high regard with a true place of respect as mentors to our generation.”

In 2018, the Work & Family Researchers Network announced that the Ellen Galinsky Generative Researcher Award will be given on an ongoing basis to a work-family researcher or research team who has/have contributed “break-through thinking to the work-family field.” In addition, she was selected by her peers in the Work & Family Researcher Network as a 2018 Top Ten Extraordinary Contributor to Work and Family Research. In 2022, she received the Lifetime Achievement Award from WFRN.

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

- 1989 to Present President and Co-Founder, Families and Work Institute, New York, NY
<http://www.familiesandwork.org/>

Families and Work Institute (FWI) is a nonprofit, nonpartisan research organization that studies the changing workforce, family and community. As a preeminent think-tank, FWI is known for being ahead of the curve, identifying emerging issues, and then conducting rigorous research that often challenges common wisdom, provides insight and knowledge. As an action-tank, FWI conducts numerous studies that put its research into action and then evaluate the results. FWI's purpose is to create research to live by. Since the Institute's founding in 1989, FWI's work has focused in the following major areas: the workforce/workplace, early childhood and youth voice.

A video celebrating Families and Work Institute's 25th Anniversary provides a succinct review of its history: <https://www.familiesandwork.org>

A 2016 book chapter also provides an overview of Families and Work Institute's history: Galinsky, E. (2016). "Research to Action: Review of Research Conducted by the Families and Work Institute." In The Oxford Handbook of Work and Family. Allen, T.D. and Eby, L.T. Eds. New York, NY: Oxford University Press.

2016 to 2022 Chief Science Officer, Bezos Family Foundation and Executive Director Mind in the Making Bezos Family Foundation

At the Bezos Family Foundation, Ellen Galinsky served on the leadership team as well as advised on the science of internal programs and grant making. In addition to serving as Executive Director of Mind in the Making, which created numerous materials and tools (described above) and overseeing the development of Vroom, she held a leadership role in a number of other Foundation programs, including a documentary (to be released in the winter of 2022-23) on "What Matters: Lesson from Covid 19 for Education"; a series of 35 short documentary films on adolescent development, and a research project on the development of a positive racial identity with The Hunt Institute.

Current Workforce/Place Projects at FWI

In October of 2022, Ellen Galinsky and the Mind in the Making Team returned to the Families and Work Institute and formed a new partnership with the Civic Science Center at the University of Minnesota.

Current projects include:

- Early Childhood: Creating new tools and training for Mind in the Making, including disseminating online modules
- Adolescence: Developing new tools and training on adolescent development in partnership with educational organizations
- Mental Health: Consulting with governmental, educational and health organizations to develop policies and training
- Workforce and Workplace: Creating a Workforce Index, initially for use with the Head Start community as the basis of an award for all of the Head Start programs nationally.

Ellen Galinsky's work is also focused on the impact of Covid 19 on the workforce and workplace and on her continuing effort to define workplaces that are inclusive and that work for employers and employees. Using the 2016 National Study of the Changing Workforce dataset, Ellen Galinsky and her colleagues researched and wrote the following reports:

- Pal, I. Galinsky, E., and Kim, S. (2021). "Employee health and Well-being after a crisis - re-imagining the role of the workplace inclusion." Community, Work & Family. 25(1):30-62.
- Kim, S., Galinsky, E., and Pal, I. (2020). An Inclusive Workplace and Health: Risk and Renewal. New York, NY: Families and Work Institute.
- Kim, S., Galinsky, E., and Pal, I. (2020). An Inclusive Workplace and Employee Engagement: Surviving and Thriving. New York, NY: Families and Work Institute.
- Galinsky, E., Goodman, N., Kim, S., and Bond, J.T. (2020). Opportunities & Obstacles: Life On and Off the Job for Employees with Disabilities. New York, NY: Families and Work Institute.
- Kim, S., Galinsky, E., and Pal, I. (2020). One Kind Word: Flexibility in the time of COVID-19. New York, NY: Families and Work Institute.

Past Early Childhood (Children, Families and Communities) Projects at FWI

Families and Work Institute's work includes a long commitment to children, families and communities.

At FWI, Ellen Galinsky has led the Mind in the Making (MITM) initiative based on her book Mind in the Making: The Seven Essential Life Skills Every Child Needs (HarperCollins, 2010), its mission is to promote Executive Function Life Skills in adults and through them in children in order to keep the fire for learning burning brightly in all of us. <http://mindinthemaking.org/>

At Families and Work Institute, lead funders for MITM included the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, The Heinz Endowments, Marks Family Foundation and Popplestone Foundation. Additional funders included the American Business Collaboration, Arizona Community Foundation, AT&T Family Care Development Fund, Carnegie Corporation of New York, Citigroup Foundation, The James and Judith K. Dimon Foundation, Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, Freddie Mac Foundation, Johnson & Johnson, Lucent Technologies Foundation, The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, A.L. Mailman Family Foundation, MetLife Foundation, The David and Lucile Packard Foundation, Pritzker Early Childhood Foundation, Procter & Gamble Company, The Prudential Foundation, Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and Vivendi Universal.

Past Early Childhood (Children, Families and Communities) Projects at FWI

School-Based Health Care Project - Initially funded by the James and Judith K. Dimon Foundation and subsequently by JPMorgan Chase & Co., this was a research initiative on the financial sustainability and nationwide expansion of school-based health centers (SBHCs)—approximately 2,000 across the U.S. that provide nearly 2 million of America's most economically disadvantaged children and adolescents with high quality primary and preventive health care that is both readily-available and affordable.

Ask the Children - This program investigated children's views of critical issues facing them as they grow up in today's world. It builds on the unparalleled success of Ellen Galinsky's book, Ask the Children: The Breakthrough Study That Reveals How to Succeed at Work and Parenting (Quill, 2000). Each of these studies is conducted with a nationally representative sample of young people. The series included the following studies:

- Ask the Children – Youth and Employment: Today's Students, Tomorrow's Workforce - Funded by JPMorgan Chase & Co., this 2001 study looked at how young people experience the world of work—their current jobs as well as their hopes, aspirations, fears and expectations about tomorrow's jobs. Findings from this study were used in 2003 and 2004 by the Ms. Foundation to develop activities for Take Our Daughters and Sons to WorkSM Day.
- Talking with Children About Work - Ceridian Corporation partnered with Ellen Galinsky in 2004 on this project creating a CD and Tip Sheets for parents with research-based information and advice to successfully manage their work and family lives. The products were developed with funding from IBM's Global Work/Life Fund and Texas Instruments, members of the American Business Collaboration.
- Ask the Children – Youth and Violence: Students Speak Out for a More Civil Society – This 2002 study, funded by The Colorado Trust and the Open Society Institute, focused on children's perceptions of the causes of violence in their homes, schools, and communities and also includes children's thoughts about solutions. It was conducted in conjunction with the National Conference of State Legislators, and its findings have had special relevance in the post-9/11 world.

- Ask the Children – Youth and Learning - This project, funded by the Civil Society Institute and The College Board was conducted with a review of the literature, interviews with experts, focus groups with children and then a nationally representative survey of young people to provide an ongoing index of engaged learning among U.S. students and move the debate on children and education away from its current sticking points more toward a focus on the purpose of education — learning.

MetLife Foundation Tri-Connecting Initiative – The MetLife Foundation's ongoing research and FWI's Ask the Children studies demonstrated that listening to youth can provide valuable information for improved understanding and relationships among youth, parents, educators and the community to support learning. With funding from the MetLife Foundation in 2003, FWI conducted a national search to honor projects across America that have found innovative ways to strengthen connections among the triad of students, parents, and schools with their communities. MetLife and FWI also produced the MetLife Tri-Connecting Action Kit to help other communities that are trying to connect for youth.

9/11 As History – This initiative, funded by Bank One, provides tools and lesson plans for educators to help children cope and contribute in the aftermath of September 11, 2011. The award-winning website, www.911ashistory.org, has free Web-based curricula that can be downloaded. Lesson plans were also assembled into a booklet, 9/11: Looking Back, Moving Forward, illustrated with student artwork and the writings of children. First released in 2002, 9/11 As History continues to serve as a resource for teachers, schools and school districts across the U.S.

Salute to Educators – In 2002, this initiative recognized and supported the efforts of educators who work directly with children (ages 0-18); 2) in the aftermath of 9/11 and created a Salute to Educators Guide on how to cope and contribute to our recovery since the terrorist attack and the war on terrorism. Salute to Educators also provided small Stepping into the Future grants for action-based proposals to assist educators.

Early Childhood Education: A Call to Action from the Business Community - Ellen Galinsky served as staff to the development and writing of this 2003 report from the Business Roundtable and Corporate Voices for Working Families.

The Connecticut School Readiness Initiative - FWI worked with the state of Connecticut to conduct a longitudinal study to assess the impact of its innovative legislation to provide universal pre-kindergarten. Data collection has been ongoing since 1999.

The Lucent Universal Preschool Initiative – This Lucent initiative in partnership with FWI and Child Care Action Campaign, was a $1 million grant program to encourage universal access to quality early childhood education. Thirteen programs received grants through this initiative, and Lucent sponsored a national conference on universal preschool in 2000.

The Florida Quality Improvement Study – With funding from the Human Resources Administration in Florida, A.L. Mailman Family Foundation and Spencer Foundation, this 1994-98 study determined how improvements in Florida's child care regulations (lower staff child ratios and better educated staff) affect the child care marketplace, parents' perceptions of quality, and the provision of quality programming.

The Hawaii Open Doors Evaluation Project – With funding from the Hawaii Office of the Governor, this 1996 project assessed early childhood program quality and outcomes for young children who participate in a fee assistance program, comparing them with children on the waiting list of this program.

The Georgia Quality Improvement Study. With funding from the Ford foundation, this 1994 study assessed how laws that require improvements in child staff ratios and group size affect the supply and cost of child care.

The Study of Children in Family Child Care and Relative Care and The Family Child Care Training Study

- These 1994 and 1995 studies investigated the determinants of quality in family child care that children are receiving and assessed the ways in which training programs, designed to improve the quality of care, are effective. This was one of the first in depth studies to examine family, friend and neighbor care, the most prevalent form of child care among very young children. The studies were funded by A.L. Mailman Family Foundation, The Spunk Fund, The David and Lucile Packard Foundation's Center for the Future of Children, Dayton Hudson, Mervyn's, Target Stores, Carnegie Corporation of New York and Smith Richardson Foundation.

Education Before School: Investing in Quality Child Care - Commissioned by the Committee for Economic Development, this 1993 status report of the child care industry, its supply, cost and quality was written with FWI Co-Founder Dana Friedman and published by Scholastic.

The Parent/Teacher Study – With funding from the Spunk Fund, this study was a sub-study of the National Child Care Staffing Study. A series of papers had been written examining mothers' satisfaction with child care, the predictors of a positive or negative relationship between parents and teachers, and the impact of mothers' jobs on children's development.

Born Learning Campaign – With an Ad Council component, United Way of America, FWI and Civitas joined forces in 2005 to create a three-year school readiness public engagement and awareness campaign to help families, caregivers and communities give their children high-quality learning experiences.

Developing a Model for Dissemination and Outreach - In 2003, FWI partnered with Civitas and Johnson & Johnson (in consultation with Doblin—the Chicago-based branding firm) on a project that investigated and assessed the feasibility of creating a national distribution network for the early childhood field. The project was funded by The James and Judith Dimon Foundation, The Harris Foundation, The Heinz Endowments, Johnson & Johnson, The David and Lucile Packard Foundation, A.L. Mailman Family Foundation and McCormick Tribune Foundation.

The Early Childhood Public Engagement Campaign - This public awareness and engagement campaign (1995-2003) increased awareness about the development of young children, the importance of the early years of life and on what families and communities can do to promote young children's school readiness and healthy development.

- From 1995-1997, FWI worked with the I Am Your Child Campaign (chaired by producer Rob Reiner) and was responsible for reviewing the scientific accuracy and designing the outreach strategy. Funding to FWI was provided by AT&T Foundation, Carnegie Corporation of New York, IBM Corporation, Johnson & Johnson, W.K. Kellogg Foundation, John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, A.L. Mailman Family Foundation, Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and The Travelers Foundation.
- The project was launched with a conference on the brain development of young children in June of 1996 (with support from Carnegie Corporation of New York, Charles A. Dana Foundation, The Harris Foundation and Robert R. McCormick Tribune Foundation) that culminated in a report of the conference findings entitled Rethinking the Brain, which was released at the White House Conference on the Brain Development of Young Children.
- The I Am Your Child Campaign had many components, including a prime time ABC television special aired in April 1997, Public Service Announcements developed with the Ad Council, and booklets for parents and community leaders; a Newsweek Magazine special edition, a Business Leaders' Forum funded by Kaiser Permanente; a review of videos for parents; a video for new parents; a CD-ROM; and outreach to national organizations and more than 150 state and local coalitions.

- The early Childhood Public Engagement Campaign continued the work of this effort and has led to FWI's Mind in the Making initiative and the Born Learning Campaign described above.

The Newsweek Forum on Early Development - Newsweek's Your Child special edition issue was launched and FWI joined with Newsweek and Johnson & Johnson to host a forum on early development in 2000, bringing together top researchers and policy-makers surrounding the launch of this issue. Ellen Galinsky helped to develop this event, moderated one session and spoke in another session.

The Public/Private Partnerships Project - This collaboration (1997-1998) with The Finance Project and the National Governors' Association was funded by the Child Care Bureau of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The initiative involved research on effective public-private partnerships and developing tools and materials to assist national, state and community leaders as they work to expand public-private efforts to improve early childhood care and education.

The Early Education Quality Improvement Project (EQUIP) – With funding from the AT&T Foundation, this project was a six-year effort (1992-1998) to launch an innovative project to use business quality expertise to redesign the early childhood delivery system, use metrics in assessing results and improving quality. The four sites selected through a RFP process as demonstration sites were West Virginia, Boston, Oregon and Kansas City. Quality Audits--instruments to assess community child care systems—were created by each of the sites and continue to be used.

Community Mobilization: Strategies to Support Young Children and Their Families – This FWI 1996 comprehensive guide to community-based action for children and families contains detailed descriptions of successful community collaborations around the country as well as tips from service providers, business, parents and policy makers.

Facilitating Change Through Technical Assistance: A National Action Strategy to Support State and Community Initiatives for Young Children and Families - Working with the National Center for Children in Poverty and in consultation with the National Governors' Association (1995-1998), FWI provided technical assistance to leaders in numerous states seeking to develop a comprehensive agenda of services and supports for young children and their families. The project was funded by The Danforth Foundation and Carnegie Corporation of New York.

The National Forum on State and Community Planning in Early Education and Care - Co-sponsored by FWI and the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC) with funding from AT&T Foundation, The Ford Foundation, A.L. Mailman Family Foundation and Carnegie Corporation of New York, this first annual Forum was held in Washington, DC in September 1993. It assembled community representatives across the U.S. engaged in convening leaders representing early childhood services, social services, schools, business, and government to identify gaps in services, to improve and coordinate services, and to redesign the early childhood delivery system. A second forum was held in 1994, and a 1996 publication was funded by A.L. Mailman Family Foundation, AT&T Foundation and Carnegie Corporation of New York.

Past Workforce/Workplace Projects at FWI

FWI is dedicated to providing objective information on changes in the workforce and workplace in order to inform decision makers in business, government, communities and families. Toward this end, the Institute conducts its own nationally representative research studies as well as studies of employees globally.

At FWI, Ellen Galinsky directed or co-directed the National Study of the Changing Workforce (NSCW), a cornerstone of FWI's research, conducted with a large nationally representative sample of U.S. workers every five or so years. The NSCW was designed to continue the U.S. Department of Labor's 1977

Quality of Employment Survey. FWI's 1992, 1997, 2002, 2008 and 2016 NSCWs provided 39-year trend data. The NSCW is the only ongoing study of its kind or scale to provide such extensive information about workers' lives on and off the job.

Funding for data collection for the NSCW came from corporations and from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

All of the reports co-authored by Ellen Galinsky from the 2008 NSCW (listed below) have garnered an unprecedented amount of attention in the business world and in the media:

- The New Male Mystique - This 2011 report finds that men now experience more work-family conflict than women. Although gender roles have become more egalitarian and women contribute increasingly to family economic well-being, men have retained the pressure to be the primary financial providers for their families and yet want to be more involved in their families than other generations of men have been—thus they are caught in the “new male mystique.”
- Times Are Changing: Gender and Generation at Work and at Home - Released in 2009 and revised in 2011, the report finds that, for the first time, young women are as likely as young men to want to advance to jobs with more responsibility. Moreover, being a mother does not significantly change young women's career ambitions.
- The State of Health in the American Workforce: Does Having an Effective Workplace Matter? - This September 2009 report provides a status report on the physical and mental health of U.S. employees. Findings reveal that the physical health of employees has declined and stress levels have increased.
- Working in Retirement: A 21st Century Phenomenon - This 2010 analysis of adults working in retirement released by FWI and the Sloan Center on Aging & Work reveals that one in five workers who have fully retired, now have a retirement job. Fully 75% of those 50 and older expect to have retirement jobs in the future.
- The Elder Care Study: Everyday Realities and Wishes for Change - This 2010 report examines caregivers' experiences at work, in medical settings, in their communities and at home and was released in conjunction with Maria Shriver's report, A Woman's Nation Takes on Alzheimer's.
- Changing Families: Changing Work – This 2013 paper will be presented to the U.S. Department of Labor for the Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of President Kennedy's Commission on the Status of Women Report: American Women.

FWI wrote a series of reports for the National Dialogue on Workplace Flexibility national and regional forums to build on the message and momentum the March 31, 2010 first White House Forum on Workplace Flexibility. These reports, all co-authored by Ellen Galinsky, examine the access to, use of, demand for and impact of workplace flexibility in different industries (health care, retail, hospitality/restaurant/tourism, education and manufacturing) and among employees in small organization, who are low-wage/hourly and who are professionals.

- Workplace Flexibility in the United States: A Status Report - This report reviews key findings from the topic-specific reports (below) as well as emerging trends in workplace flexibility, common assumptions about flexibility that are not supported by FWI's findings, and the relationship between flexibility and various outcomes.
- Workplace Flexibility in Manufacturing Companies - Data reveal that employees in the manufacturing industry are typically less satisfied and engaged with their jobs than employees in other sectors and currently have significantly less access to work schedule flexibility.

- Workplace Flexibility in the Hospitality, Restaurant and Tourism Industry - Flexibility is difficult to obtain in the hospitality, restaurant, and tourism industries (HRT), but it is still necessary and possible. This report helps readers tailor flexibility to each different work place and type within these sectors.
- Workplace Flexibility and Low-Wage Employees - Flexibility as it pertains to the low-wage workforce is a topic that is studied less-frequently than flexibility and higher-wage employees. FWI finds that while low-wage employees have much less access to many types of flexibility than higher-wage employees, low- and higher-wage employees are equally pressed for time in their personal lives and place equal value on having a flexible workplace.
- Workplace Flexibility in the Health Services Industry - This study reveals that the health service industry is at the forefront of workplace flexibility implementation. Employers in health services are far more likely than employers in other industries to see flexibility as a business tool rather than a favor or a perk.
- Workplace Flexibility Among Small Employers - This report addresses the many assumptions that prevail about workplace flexibility at smaller organizations by answering five key questions about its prevalence, use, demand, ease of accessibility, and its influence on job satisfaction/retention.
- Retail Industry Employees and Turnover - Despite the belief that retail work allows for easy transitions between jobs, FWI data reveal that transitioning between employers is not quite so common.
- Workplace Flexibility Among Professional Employees - This report provides a comparison between the workplace flexibility options available to professional employees with those available to all other employees in the U.S. workforce and how professionals view working flexibly.
- Workplace Flexibility Among Elementary and Secondary School Teachers and Other Professionals - This report compares the workplace flexibility options available to elementary and secondary school teachers to professionals in other non-education related industries.

Other National Study of the Changing Workforce reports where Ellen Galinsky is the lead author include:

- From "Research to Action: Lessons in Bringing about Workplace Change" - This 2011 article was published in the journal Future of Children and summarizes FWI's data on workplace flexibility from the NSCW and the many lessons learned from the When Work Works initiative (described below).
- The Future of Work-Life Fit - This 2011 article was published in a special issue of Organizational Dynamics and highlights several current and impending challenges associated with the workplace and the workforce evolution since work-life fit emerged as a research topic in the 1960s and 1970s.
- The Real Opt-Out Revolution: How Career Aspirations of American Employees Change Over Time – This chapter was published in Women Who Opt Out: The Debate Over Working Mothers and Work-Family Balance (2012 Bernie D. Jones, editor, published by New York University Press). It argues that by focusing on women who choose to leave the workforce, the debate thus far has missed an important trend among those who remain in the workforce. NSCW data show that a number of employees—women and men alike—are “opting out” of wanting to move up the traditional career ladder to positions with increasing levels of responsibility and explores why this is the case.
- “Workplace Flexibility: A Model of Change” - Published in Community, Work and Family in 2013, this article describes the key principles behind the theoretical- and research-based change experiment in promoting effective and flexible workplaces—When Work Works.

- “Business Solutions” – Written for the upcoming (2014) The Shriver Report: A Woman's Nation Pushes Back from the Brink, this chapter examines the rates of financial insecurity among American women and the children who depend on them, investigate the impact of it on our nation's institutions and economic future, and promote modern solutions to help women strengthen their financial status.

Ellen Galinsky also co-directed FWI's National Study of Employers (NSE), a nationally representative study that has tracked trends in employment benefits, policies and practices since 1998 (then called the Business Work-Life Study).

- The National Study of Employers was conducted in 2005, 2008, 2012 and 2016 with funding from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation and the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) and is the most comprehensive and far-reaching study of the practices, policies, programs and benefits provided by U.S. employers to address the changing needs of today's workforce and workplace, including workplace flexibility, health care and economic security benefits, caregiving leave and elder care assistance. The latest report was published in 2016 and co-authored by Kenneth Matos, Ellen Galinsky, and James T. Bond.
- The Impact of the Recession on Employers - FWI surveyed a random sample of 400 U.S. employers with 50 or more employees in May of 2009 in order to better understand the impact of the recession on the U.S. labor force and on employers. This study was released on July 23, 2009 as well as presented at a hearing of the Joint Economic Committee of the U.S. Congress on that day.

Both the 2008 NSE and the 2009 Impact of the Recession on Employers report were used extensively by the White House Council of Economic Advisers in a report released at the first White House Forum on Workplace Flexibility on March 31, 2010 entitled Work-Life Balance and the Economics of Workplace Flexibility.

At FWI, Ellen Galinsky also co-directed When Work Works, a project on workplace flexibility and effectiveness first funded by the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, that has produced a series of research papers and in 2005 launched the Alfred P. Sloan Awards for Business Excellence in Workplace Flexibility. In 2011, the Society for Human Resource Management and the Families and Work Institute formed a ground-breaking, multi-year partnership that takes When Work Works to businesses around the country. <http://www.whenworkworks.org/>

When Work Works was designed to share research on what makes work "work" in the 21st Century. Originally funded by the Sloan Foundation in 2003, it has been a joint project of FWI and SHRM since 2011. Its purpose is to highlight the importance of workforce effectiveness and workplace flexibility as strategies to enhance businesses' competitive advantage in the global economy, and to help both employers and employees succeed by sharing research findings; sharing best practices; creating practical resources; and providing recognition to top employers through the Sloan Awards. Partnership efforts include practical tools to help employers and human resource professionals advocate for and implement effective and flexible workplace strategies; research shared with employers on how effective and flexible workplaces can benefit employers and employees; the annual Work-Life and Workflex Conferences which engage Human Resource thought leaders from the areas of Work Life, Talent Management, Diversity and Inclusion and workplace effectiveness; and the Alfred P. Sloan Awards for Business Excellence in Workplace Flexibility since 2005.

Since 2008, When Work Works has produced yearly guides (Guide to Bold New Ideas for Making Work "Work") published by FWI and SHRM that highlight best practices by Sloan Award winners. Each employer is featured with a short summary of the tactics the employer uses to create a flexible work environment for its employees.

Other

At Families and Work Institute, Ellen Galinsky also oversaw the following programs.

Work Life Legacy Award – This annual award was established by Families and Work Institute in 2004 to capture the stories of those exemplary individuals who have created and advanced the work life movement. By documenting the history of this movement as it evolves and by paying tribute to its leaders, FWI hopes to witness the past and inspire the future. In addition, FWI and Bright Horizons Family Solutions proudly honor the memory of Johnson & Johnson's champion of working families through the annual Chris C. Kjeldsen Work Life Legacy Award which recognizes work life practitioners who have made extraordinary contributions to the field as leaders and innovators. An afternoon Immersion Learning Experience precedes the Award dinner each year.

Work Life Legacy Military Award – This annual award was created by Families and Work Institute's Board of Directors in 2012 as a way of identifying what employers are doing for service members and their families in the transition to the civilian workforce, honoring best practices, and helping other employers make a difference for those who have served our country. With more than two million military veterans expected to move into the civilian workforce by 2016, the need for providing opportunities and supports for this community has become both a business and a national imperative.

Corporate Leadership Circle (CLC) - This is a unique group of top-level national and global companies deeply interested in how to create an engaged and productive workforce and in research-based workforce trends. The various forums FWI provides (Circle Conference Calls, Briefings, Media Alerts) allow these companies to learn from FWI's research, one another and from an array of authors and other experts.

The Conference Board Work Life Leadership Council – Between 1983 and 2013, in partnership with The Conference Board, Ellen Galinsky co-founded and staffs The Conference Board Work Life Leadership Council, a membership group that provides leadership and support to influence the business community to meet the changing personal/family needs of its diverse workforce.

Past Workforce/Workplace Projects at FWI

Below is a listing of projects Ellen Galinsky has directed or co-directed over the Institute's history.

The Conference Board-Families and Work Institute Work Life Conference – From 1985 to 2010, Families and Work Institute served as the program director for the annual work life conference convened by The Conference Board and FWI. This conference was known as the “thought leader” conference in the work-life field.

Leaders in a Global Economy – This 2008 study, conducted jointly with Catalyst, was designed to move issues of talent management forward by developing empirical knowledge about senior and pipeline leaders in Europe, the U.S. and Asia and to use these findings to provide a new basis for theory and practice. It was a follow-up to the 2003 Leaders in a Global Economy study, a worldwide survey of the 100 most senior men and the 100 most senior women at 10 major U.S. headquartered global companies in a range of industries, conducted by FWI, Catalyst and Boston College Center for Work & Family. The first 2008 report, Leaders in a Global Economy: Finding the Fit for Top Talent, found that women and men executives at major global companies share the same priorities for what they value most in their workplaces and careers. The second report, Leaders in a Global Economy: Talent Management in European Cultures, analyzed data on a sample of more than 4,500 senior and pipeline business leaders in three cultural regions.

The Supporting Work Project - FWI focused on understanding and addressing the issues and challenges of entry-level, hourly employees. With funding from the Ford Foundation, this project brought employers, community-based programs and public leaders into innovative partnerships to meet the needs of America's working families.

Leaders in a Global Economy - This 2003 study explored what helps and hinders success among top executives in multi-national companies. Since 2000, 12 companies participated in this project.

Feeling Overworked - This 2001 study provided an in-depth look at job and workplace factors that contribute to American workers feeling overworked, and found that one third of the U.S. workforce report chronically feeling overworked.

Women: The New Providers (The Whirlpool Foundation Study) - This 1995 study described the place that women assumed in society, which called for new models, and a new language that better represented and valued their contributions.

An Evaluation of Johnson & Johnson's Work and Family Initiative - This study, funded by Johnson & Johnson, assessed the impact of a comprehensive work-family agenda on the productivity and family lives of employees at four Johnson & Johnson companies. The report was published in 1993 and was one of the first serious pre and post evaluations of work-life supports.

Parental Leave and Productivity - The nation's experts on the subject of parental leave discussed the costs and benefits of various company parental leave policies. The 1993 report addressed the most frequently asked questions of decision-makers in the private sector.

Beyond the Parental Leave Debate - This project, supported by the Ford Foundation, examined the impact of newly implemented parental leave statutes on employers and new parents in four states: Oregon, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Rhode Island. The report was published in 1991, and was one of the first rigorous studies to examine the impact of parental leave.

The Corporate Reference Guide to Work-Family Programs - This 1991 book remained the most complete guide to work family programs in the private sector until Workflex was published by SHRM in 2012.

The State Reference Guide to Work-Family Programs - This 1992 guide funded by the Ford Foundation, paralleled The Corporate Reference Guide and described what the 50 states were doing to meet the work-life needs of state employees.

The Employer Group - With initial funding from the Carnegie Corporation of New York and The Pew Charitable Trusts and developed in collaboration with the Marriott Corporation, this group convened more than a dozen business leaders whose companies employ low-wage and entry-level employees from 1995 to 2003.

A Time of Transition: Work, Family and Community - On February 25 and 26, 1999, with funding from the Ford Foundation, FWI convened a forum of lead thinkers from a variety of fields to assess the history and future of families, work and communities. A report, written by sociologist Arlene Skolnick, entitled A Time of Transition: Work, Family and Community in the Information Age, was later developed from this meeting.

The Global Forum on Family and Work - Recognizing the incredible potential of exploring work life issues in a global context, FWI and Boston College Center for Work & Family partnered to host the first-ever Global Network on Family and Work in France in April 1999 with 45 leaders from the business, research and policy arenas from 14 countries attended in attendance.

Supporting Entry-Level, Hourly Employees - These three 2006 reports look at the issues and challenges of low-wage and low-income employees: What Do We Know About Entry-Level, Hourly Employees?; How Can Employers Increase the Productivity and Retention of Entry-Level, Hourly Employees?; and What Workplace Flexibility is Available to Entry-Level, Hourly Employees?

The Aging Workforce – In 2005, FWI partnered with Boston College's Center on Aging & Work/Workplace Flexibility to create two reports on the experiences of older workers from the 2002 NSCW: Context Matters: Insights about Older Workers and The Diverse Employment Experiences of Older Men and Women in the Workforce.

Overwork in America: When the Way We Work Becomes Too Much - This 2005 nationally representative study looks at changes in the way Americans work and live. It finds that the fast-paced, global 24/7 economy, the pressures of competition and technology have blurred the traditional boundaries between work life and home life.

Generation & Gender in the Workplace - This 2004 study, based on the 2002 NSCW, examines differences among generations in the workforce over the last 25 years. A follow-up report, Older Employees in the Workforce, looks at cross-generational supervisory relationships, specifically older employees being managed by younger ones.

Alfred P. Sloan Awards for Faculty Career Flexibility - FWI joined forces with the American Council on Education (ACE) with funding from the Sloan Foundation to create a rigorous protocol for conferring awards to colleges and university recognized for their leadership and accomplishments in implementing groundbreaking policies and practices regarding career flexibility for tenured/tenure-track faculty over the life cycle. ACE continues to implement these awards.

In addition to these studies of employees, Ellen Galinsky has worked with Citigroup, Corning, Inc., the Glass Ceiling Commission of the U.S. Department of Labor, the AT&T Family Care Development Fund, Levi Strauss, and WorldBank, in conducting studies or literature reviews on work life programs and policies.

HIGHLIGHTS OF PAST PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

1979 to 1989 Faculty, Research Division, Bank Street College of Education, New York, NY
<http://bankstreet.edu/>

Ellen Galinsky helped to institute the field of work and family life while she was on the faculty of Bank Street College and directed numerous studies of work and family life, stress and productivity. These studies included the Corporate Work and Family Life Study, a 1983 study which examined the work-family conflicts of employees at Merck with funding from Merck, Ford Foundation, German Marshall Fund and Exxon Corporation; and The Family Study, conducted with factory workers which examined how jobs affect families with funding from the A.L. Mailman Family Foundation, Spunk Fund, among others.

1964 to 1979 Publications Department, Program Development Institute and School for Children Faculty, Bank Street College of Education, New York, NY

From 1964-68, Ellen Galinsky had a foundation grant to spend time out of the classroom to create materials about the education of young children for parents and teachers.

In 1974, she was a key founder of the Family Center at Bank Street, an infant, toddler program. In 1977-78, she assumed leadership in expanding this program to two additional groups and served as its coordinator. She wrote and photographed a filmstrip for the U.S. Office of Education entitled Education Before Five. This filmstrip, funded through a contract to Bank Street College, explained the major educational philosophies and practices in programs for young children.

In 1971, she was funded to write and photograph a series of filmstrips on aspects of school for young children; created ten filmstrips of such topics as school beginnings, setting up classrooms and developing a social studies program. Ellen Galinsky directed several 16mm films on education made by the U.S. Office of Education, and served as a consultant to child care programs, schools, children's television and radio and foundations.

She worked for the Bank Street College Follow Through program on developing materials for parents and teachers and as a demonstration teacher. In addition, she worked with numerous corporations, including Johnson & Johnson, AT&T, Illinois Bell, and Levi Strauss, helping them develop work-family policies and conducting workplace seminars.

With Diane Hughes of New York University, she designed and analyzed a study on child care and productivity for Fortune magazine which was conducted by the Gallup Organization. This survey was featured as a cover story in Fortune on February 16, 1987.

Ellen Galinsky was the principal author of Investing in Quality Child Care: A Report for AT&T. (Over 50,000 copies were distributed.)

Ellen Galinsky worked with numerous corporations in conducting seminars on work and family life. These include American Express, Citibank, Time, Inc., Home Box Office, Bristol-Myers, Pfizer and many others. She served as a consultant to develop employer family responsive policies at AT&T, DuPont, Ford Foundation and the Governor's Corporate Advisory Commission on Employers' Initiatives for Child Day Care in the State of Virginia.

- 1982 and 1983 DAYTIME
(Hearst/ABC Cable Television Company that became Lifetime Television)
Directed and appeared on Family Matters, eight shows on parenting.
- February 1980 MISTER ROGERS TALKS TO PARENTS ABOUT SUPERHEROES
August 1979 MISTER ROGERS TALKS TO PARENTS ABOUT SCHOOL
Appeared as educational expert with Fred Rogers on these national PBS shows.
- 1977 to 1978 COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, New York, NY
Worked with Dr. Alfred Kahn and Dr. Sheila Kamerman on a six-nation study of family policy. Took responsibility for assembling a portrait of infant care in the U.S.
- Summer 1963 ACTION FOR APPALACHIAN YOUTH, Charleston, WV
Funded by the President's Commission for Youth Crime and Juvenile Delinquency, interviewed parents and their teenaged children whom were known juvenile offenders and school dropouts.

SELECT PHOTOGRAPHY EXHIBITS/PUBLICATIONS

Ellen Galinsky is also a photographer. For more than five decades, her photographs have traced the nexus between death and rebirth, capturing what happens when nature reclaims what men and women have built. Since 2008, she has been photographing Route 66; travelling from its origins in Illinois to its end in California. By exploring the iconic Route 66—then a symbol of modernity, now often cast aside by superhighways, Galinsky photographs abandoned buildings, taking an inside-out perceptive, looking at “what is” through the lens of “what was.” She had her first major exhibit in Charleston, WV, her hometown, at the Charleston Art Gallery in 1970. Later, she was chosen for a solo exhibition at the Soho Foundation-Alfred Stieglitz Gallery in 1975, followed by an exhibit at Bank Street College in 1979. The Rockland Center for the Arts, West Nyack, NY presented her solo exhibition in 2003 as did the UMA Gallery, New York City in 2005 and 2007. She also had one-person exhibits at the New York Hall of Science, Queens, NY in 2006, at RiverWinds Gallery in Beacon, NY in 2008 and at Blue Hills Plaza, Orangeburg NY in 2013. She has exhibited in numerous group shows, including Hopper House in Nyack, NY; Imaging Arts in Tappan, NY; Outside In Gallery in Piermont, NY; and GaGa in Rockland County, NY. She has been included in the Upstream Gallery shows, now in Hastings on Hudson, in 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, and 2018 and 2022; Blue Hills Plaza in 2011 with the show traveling to the New York Hall of Science in 2012 and in 2020, and the Blue Door Art Center in Yonkers, NY in 2013, with the show traveling to Hastings on Hudson, NY. In 2018, she was included in the juried show, Women by Women at the Blue Door Art Center in Yonkers. In 2019, she had a solo show of her Route 66 photographs at the Rockland Center for the Arts. In January 2020, she had a solo show at Soho Photo Gallery in New York City.

A number of Ellen Galinsky's books and reports are illustrated with her photographs, including The New Extended Family (1977), The Preschool Years (1988), and the groundbreaking Ask the Children (1999), selected by the Wall Street Journal as one of the best work-life books of 1999. Among the reports that feature her photographs are Youth and Employment: Today's Students, Tomorrow's Workforce (2001), Youth and Violence: Students Speak Out for a More Civil Society (2002), and Navigating Work and Family: Hands-on Advice for Working Parents (2002). Ellen Galinsky is also the author and photographer of several children's books: Catbird (1971) and The Baby Cardinal (1977). She was included in the historic book of photographs, Women See Woman (1976). Her photographs were displayed at The White House Conference on Early Learning (1997).

FAMILY

Ellen Galinsky is married to artist Norman Galinsky, and they are the parents of two grown children: Philip, an ethnomusicologist and founder-director of Samba New York—an inspiring performance group—and Lara, Director of Impact Innovation at Unfinished and Founder and Social Impact Strategist of The Genuine. Norman and Ellen Galinsky have two grandchildren—Antonio and Azaiah.
