I find immense value in the multidisciplinary nature of the WFRN and appreciate the perspective it brings to the field. The WFRN provides a rare opportunity to bring our different disciplines on work and family together to see the bigger picture and make more of an impact on the world. My research is focused on work-nonwork boundary management and its implications for organizational policy and well-being, and this research would not be possible without the contributions of colleagues in other disciplines who provide rich theoretical perspective and contextualization for understanding work and family issues.

I am excited for the possibility of serving as a member of the WFRN Executive Board. I have been an active member of the WFRN continuously since 2012 and have attended each conference. I was also a member of the 2016 WFRN Early Career Fellowship cohort. Most recently, I served as chair of the WFRN Membership Engagement Committee from 2019 to 2023, and before that as a member in 2018.

My priorities for the WFRN include maintaining its financial health as well as a healthy and engaged membership both in conference and non-conference years. I would also love to see more opportunities for students and early career scholars to thrive in our organization to build engagement early and to build strong and long-lasting multidisciplinary connections in the work-family research area.
